Hi, you are right that the installer is copying most of the files into /opt/datawarrior, which is a typical place to put installed applications. It also is supposed to add entries to the desktop database to tell Kubuntu about the new file types and the icons to use to show them. It also should create a '.desktop' file defining associating the application icon with the launch script (/opt/datawarrior/datawarrior) and create a desktop icon or/and add one onto the hierarchical application menu. Depending on the Linux dialect this may not always happen. If you now search for an application, then DataWarrior should show up. In the worst case, you should start it manually from a terminal with '/opt/datawarrior/datawarrior'.
