Hi Missmachine,

if you successfully have run the install.sh with sudo or as a super user, then you can remove the original datawarrior folder (not the one in '/opt'). The openmolecules-datawarrior.desktop file should have been copied to the proper location on your system and the desktop database should know about it. Also a double click on a dwar file should open it in DataWarrior. However, I have tried with some Linux versions including Ubuntu, but not with Kubuntu.
